

WILL TODAY BE THE DAY? (DETENTION)

OBJECTIVES

- Staff will learn the importance of working safely everyday

A worker is injured, suffers a disabling injury or is killed in the workplace every few seconds in the United States. "Will today be the day?" Every day is a beautiful day; it holds promise, opportunity for greatness and success. However, each day on the streets also holds countless opportunities to suffer skin ripping, bone crushing, back cracking, and life altering injury. "Will today be the day?"

Will today be the day you forget to follow a safety rule? The day you assumed an inmate was harmless.

Will today be the day you fall victim to a bad habit? The day you pencil-whip a suicidal inmate observation form? The day officers find the inmate hanging in a cell.

Will today be the day you make a deadly assumption? The day you let your guard down when contacting an inmate?

Will today be the day you're in a hurry to finish a job or go home? Will today be the day you're in a hurry and put your hand in a razor collection box without looking? The day you get Hepatitis or Aids.

Will today be the day your family gets the call that changes everything? The day in which you are severely injured and transported by ambulance to the hospital or morgue.

Will today be the day when a split second decision changes and affects your life forever? Will today be the day you decide not to act on a security or safety matter?

Don't let today be the day. Always follow safe work practices, and remember that nothing you do is worth getting hurt or killed. With your attention, care and respect for safety, neither this nor any other day will be the day for you.
